te its poverty and meanness at least a human nobility. Its lack of everything that renders ritual splendid only brings into more distinct proportions the strength and earnestness of a man ho is a living sacrifice of all that Frenchmen hold bear-applaus; power, guxury, mpgnificence. That such a preacher should occupy such a pulpit, ais polished eloquence streaming from the tawdry cotton-lace drapery of an old Radical meetinghouse, at once proclaims that the former mighty Sulpician adheres to the later religious dogmas of his maturity; that the Catholic world has all but lorgotten him; that the Protestant world has never signalized his accession; and that the world of France, which is neither Catholic nor Protestant, but simply Paris, pays little heed to his voice, and sone to his former glory or present needs. He is simply ignored. It is as if the Universal Exhibition had clentlessly withdrawn itself from the Champs de Mars, leaving the Eiffel Tower alone in the landscape, its lights extinguished, its machinery derelies, its paint crumbled off, its iron rusty, its tall limbs reaching fearless and pathetic to the sky, its foundations decaying and moss covered,

Acalytes, very like those one sees in any Roman Catholic church, are busily arranging the altar and putting the little sanctuary in order. There are six tall lights, three on either side of the tabernacle; a crucifix surmounts it. The ornaments on the altar shelves are poor and few. The neasest little chapel in the slums of London or in mining regions of Colorado is not more woebegone. Meanwhile the congregation is filling the seats. Only in Paris can such a human motley be discovered. Frenchmen, small, swarthy, nervous, in shiny broadcloth, most of them old, a few young and full of verve: Frenchwomen, all old, so far as one sees, poorly but neatly dressed, their faces wrinkled and seamed, their expression their faces wrinkled and seamed, their expression anxious or cynical. Englishwomen, plump, oily, ill-dressed, important in their self-consciousness, not appearing to be able clearly to follow the preacher, but satisfied that he has taken the right step. A few Italians, Spaniards, Russians, in for sight-seeing, not caring at all for the realities of the occasion. Americans who smile at the poverty of the church are aghast at the uncanny elements sight-seeing, not carring at an 101 the occasion. Americans who smile at the poverty of the church are aghast at the uncanny elements in the heterogeneous congregation. Amazed by the vigor and anguency of the preacher, they turn hitfully from him to scan the numerous human types in the pc. 4. The actual membership of the church cannot exceed 150 or 200. A friend says that there is no stable congregation to speak of; the seats are filled by transients, chiefly American and seats are filled by transients, chiefly American and English.

That such a preacher should be isolated one cannot fail to lament. We have not heard his text, if indeed he used one. But it is apparent that his discourse is to be broad in its view of the world, sympathetic in its human feeling, Christian in its ethies. The sermon is of that classic quality rarely heard outside the best pulpits of France. It is a rich, rhetorical contrivance, carefully planned in each part, finely proportioned and balanced and overlaid with ornament harmonious with its structure. It is in effect an appeal for a millennium. It is a protest against the brute force which he claimed was becoming the only force in the world—armies becoming the only force in the world—armies penacing the peace of the human race, low passions degrading individual men to the life of parates, governments ignoring moral responsibility, politics a science of mendaciensness and greed, setarianism usurping the place of a religion founded on universal love. Thence he proceeded to indicate the truer civil society—all thought free but Christian, as (and some of the Americans smiled) it is in the Republic of the United States; all science leaping and darting and springing over the globs to bring nations closer together—and he mentioned M. De Lesseps and the Panama Canal. Some French shoulders were shrugged. The true Christian spirit bringing all Christians into one clurch, the Patriarch of Constantinople, the Pope of Rome and the Archbishop of Canteroury being the triad for this new unification—and iome of the Englishwomen frowned.

The defect of the sermon consisted in its logical barrenness. The rhetoric was so the tast one the Pope of Rome and the Archbishop of Canterpary being the triad for this new unification—and some of the Englishwomen frowned.

The defect of the sermon consisted in its logical barrenness. The rhetoric was so fine that one was carried away in admiration. The mode of speech was dignified, unctuous, highly refined.
So would any of the great reciters on the French stage have delivered a discourse by Fencion.
The diction was scholarlike, the phrasing melodious, the rounding of periods the perfection of style. He paused toward the percration; drank a glass of water, or possibly wine, rested for an instant or two and set out toward a culminating burst which was the finest deliverance I have ever heard from human lips, for style of speech and beauty of enunciation, for ardor and intensity.
But when he had left the pulpit and the energy of his own temperament imparted through his burning lips had begun to subside, the question remained—What will come of it? The only answer seemed to be, nothing.

One can imagine the influence a Bossaet, a Lacordaire, exercised in France from pulpits out af which they appealed to a nation that still naisted upon calling itself Christian. Had Pere Hyacinthe a similar world to address, surely ace have changed. France is not the France of Louis. Pere Hyacinthe, by his own change, has fistanced even such France as may still care for dogmatic religion. He clings in his catechism and his ereed to all the fundamental doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church except Papal Infallibility. He passes beyond the pale of that shurch in accrediting to the See of Canterbury a special ecclesiastical impartunce which no Anglitan has ever claimed for it. His friendship with bean Stanley, whose charming nature won every nan who came much in contact with him, no loubt had much to do with this equalizing of the East and the Primate of the Roman communion. But men have grown contemptuous of such diplomate of religion. It was a melancholy thing to see the left of the great of the Roman communion. But of the East and the Primate of the Roman com-munion. But men have grown contemptuous of such diplomacy of religion. It was a melancholy thing to see the fine figure descend from the noor pulpit and into the still poerer sanctuary. I understand that he and his family are now wholly dependent upon the offerings of those who attend the little meeting-house in the Rue D'Arras. Their son, a bright and graceful boy about fifteen years old is the prize student in one of the Jesuit lyceums in Paris, and his preceptors look upon him with pride and affection.

THE STHAMER LA GASCOGNE MEETS IT-AR

RIVALS ON OCEAN VESSELS. French steamer La Gascogne reached her pler yesterday afternoon with over 300 cabin and hundreds of steerage passengers on board, few of whom knew that on their way over they had passed through a field of feebergs so close as to make the veteran sailors abound and the commander of the vessel feel decidedly ancomfortable. It was between 3 and 4 o'clock on the morning of August 23 when the great steamer was plunging along at about eighteen miles an hour that the watch on dock through the dim light made out the outlines of the floating bergs. There were six that could be seen from the deck. None of them were tall, the hot sun of the southern latitude to which they had drifted having melted down the tops until not more than ten feet showed above water. But below the water the mousters still remained unharmed by the sun's rays. The largest one seen from La Gascogne seemed to be about 120 feet in length and was not more than 1,500 feet away. The feebergs were seen in latitude 45 degrees 58 minutes, longitude 55 iegrees 1 minute.

Captain Santelli said that the loebergs were doubt-melted in a few days by the warm waters of the Builf Stream into which they were rapidly drifting when he saw them. The night was clear when they were seen from La Gascogne, so that it was compara-tively an easy task to change the course of the vessel and glide between them. There were three on one side and three on the other, forming a sort of lane through which the steamer passed in safety. At one place they were within 300 feet of one of the bergs. place they were within 300 feet of one of the bergs.

A TALK WITH MINISTER DOUGLASS. state, Mr. Wharton, said this evening that he had received no intelligence of the situation of affairs in Hayti in addition to that made public yesterday. He knew nothing in regard to the reports that the appointment of Fred. Douglass as Minister to Hayti was at the Fifth Avenue Theatre to-night for the first

In an interview with a "Post" reporter to-day upon the subject of his rumored recall, Mr. Douglahimself said: "If I should happen to be recalled l should not feel humiliated in the least. I neve sought the appointment in any way, and the nomination was somewhat of a surprise. But I do no believe there is any truth in the report. There was ome opposition to my appointment prior to the time the nomination was made by the President, I know, but that was all thoroughly considered at the time." It is understood that the opposition referred to came from some New-York merchants who wanted a business man appointed. If there were any opposition to him on the part of residents of Hayti, Mr. Douglass said that it was probably due to the part he took General Grant's Domingo annexation project. "But, continued he, "whatever may have been my view then in regard to annexation, I do not think either then in regard to annoxation, I do not that excess san Domingo or Hayti is in a condition to be annexed at present, and any attempt to annex them, I am sure, would be futile." MEMORIAL DAY.

ITS FIRST SUGGESTION CREDITED TO MRS. KIM- SUMMER GUESTS FISHING AND CRABBING BALL, OF PHILADELPHIA.

To the Editor of The Tribune. Sir: As one knowing the facts, permit me to say that the credit of first suggesting "Memorial Day" belongs to Mrs. Henry S. Kimball, of West Philadelphia, Penn. The suggestion was made by her in 1868, to General John A. Logan, then Commander-tn-Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. and Mrs. Kimball were old friends of General

Logan's. On their return home from a Southern tour Mrs. Kimball wrote to General Logan stating that she had particularly noticed the Southern women decorating the graves of their dead fallen in battle; and suggested to him that, as the Commander in Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, he should have our heroic soldiers, whose lonely graves were many, scattered and unmarked, remembered in the sam 58 00 beautiful way. The General was deeply impressed with the idea. Soon afterward he wrote Mrs. Kimball, thanking her for the suggestion, and stating that he felt that such a touching tribute to his dead comrades would undoubtedly meet with general favor. After carefully reflecting upon how he should give the matter practical shape, he stated his ideas to General Chipman, of the Grand Army of the Republic staff, and requested him to formulate them in an order 1 10 This order, modified and enlarged by General Legan 25 00 himself, was issued to the Grand Army of the Republic as "Order No. 11," and May 30, 1868, was named as the day it should go into effect. The order was generally well received throughout the country, and practically obeyed by the Grand Army of the Republic, greatly to General Logan's satisfaction, evidenced in the following letter to Mrs. Kimball. dated Washington, July 9, 1868;

My Dear Friend: It is very gratifying to me as I do day after day from my friends of the reception of my Order No. 11. As you observe, the custom is a beautiful one, and I am confident that it will not only never pass away from the recollection of the American people, but will more deeply ingraft itself in their hearts, and each returning anniversary of sacred decoration will increase in impressive devotion to our patriot dead; and the crowns we weave for them of never-fading laurel and the beautiful flowers strewn over their graves give birth to sentiments of love and of honer which bind the past, the present and the future in one continuous chain of admiration that to and service of even the humblest private shall never be orgotten. . . You'rs truly, General Logan's private secretary at the time, and saw all the correspondence relating to the matter. heard General Logan tell his friends and other callers that he was indebted to Mrs. Kimball for the sugestion to decorate our soldiers' graves, saw him in the boats that rock to and fro in the channel. hand them Mrs. Kimball's setter on the subject to read, and heard General Logan state to General Chipman his views and wishes, out of which "Order No. 11" grew, and during the Presidential canvaes of that year, on which I went with him, he received many encomisms wherever he went for the inauguration of Memorial Day, and he never refrained from giving Mrs. Kimbali full credit for the idea, feeling quite content and appreciative for the share of honor that naturally and properly flowed to him for putting is into practical and permanent operation.

since then Memorial Day has silently matured nto a tender and welcome custom throughout our and, and has additionally endeared to the hearts of the people the memory of that great-hearted, brave and brilliant soldier, orator and statesman, John A. ogan.

ELIXIRS OF LIFE.

the Editor of The Tribune. Sir: So much interest is being taken in what is known as the Brown-Sequard Elixir—a preparation nade from the genital glands of male animals—that the following extract from that recently published and extraordinary book, "The Secret Doctrine," may possibly set chemists and doctors to thinking and working on a line of investigation far more likely to lead to a successful result than that pointed out by Dr. Brown-Sequard. The quotation will be found in a foot-note to page 144, Vol. I, and thus reads: He who would allotropize sluggish oxygen into zone to a measure of alchemical activity, reducing t to its pure essence (for which there are means), would discover thereby a substitute for an "Elixie of Life," and prepare it for practical use.

There, what chemist will solve the problem? Yours, New-York Aug. 24, 1889. F. T. S.

NOTES OF THE STAGE.

The big theatre on the West 3lde opens its door to night, and the first attraction offered is A. M. Palmer's original Captain Swift company. The Grand Opera House has a large class of regular attendants of its performances, and, as this will be the only chance this season for New York people to see the play with its original cast, the friends of the company ought also to help to fill the house.

The preliminary season at Daly's begins to-night with Sol Smith Russell's presentation of "A Poor Relation." The character is said to be a good one for the display of Mr. Russell's powers as an actor. The managers of "The Great Metropolis" say that be seen, however, till Saturday night, when it will open the season at Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre. The sale of seats begins this morning. Theatre.

The J. C. Duff Opera Company will sing "Paola" time in this city. It is by Paulton and Jakobowski, the authors of "Erminie."

"La Fille de Madame Angot" will be sung at Ter race Gardon this evening. The bill for Wednesday is "Giroffe-Giroffa."

"Half-Seas Over" will be given at an author's matinee at the Madison Square Theatre on Friday afternoor, by members of companies now playing and rehearsing in town.

Frederick de Belleville, Clara Morris's leading man, arrived in this city from Europe last week. The company will begin its season at the Union Square Theatre on October 25.

THE PUNERAL OF CAPTAIN JOHN SANDERS.

The funeral of Captain John Sanders, of the High Bridge police, occurred yesterday afternoon, and was n accordance with the wishes of his family, of the simplest character. Before the hour set for the funeral, 1 o'clock, a great crowd of people had assembled before his home, No. 147 East Ninetiethst., many of whom passed into the house to take a last look at the body of the popular official. Soon after 1 o'clock, the body was borne from the house, acempanied by the pall-hearers, Captains Clinchy, Cartwright, Cassidy, Yules, Gastlin, Brooks, Westerveit and Siebert, and carried along the lines of over 300 policemen and the Reno Post, which were formed on the south side of Ninetieth-st., and placed in the searse. Immediately afterward the correge began to move toward First-ave. The escort consisted of the ments form the 19th, 20th, 25th, 28th, 27th, 29th, 30th and 32d Prechets, under command of Capitalis Allaire, Garland, Connors, Sergeant Robb, Capitalis Eakins, Smith, Thompson and J. H. McCullogh; the members of the Hoboken Turtle Club and of the Terrace Bowling Club. The burial took place at Calvary

" CLOVER'S" FIGHT AGAINST TONSILLITIS. All the people about Palmer's Theatre have a fondess for clover-leaves. They wear artificial ones as carf-pins, and carry real ones in their pockets, but o quantity of them could keep the "Clover" company safe from tonsillitis, and charms had to be east aside and the spray machine resorted to. Of late, indeed, the spray machine has played about as important a part in the opera as the red lights. Miss Manola was kept off the stage for one or two nights by the disease, and Madame Cottrelly surrendered after a brave fight De Wolf Hopper was probably the saddest victim of all, for when he had to give up his part on Thursday evening he broke his record. He has been singing in operas for about ten years, and nover before missed a performance.

Yesferday, however, everybody was said to be in good condition, and the whole company will be enhand to-night, as of old.

AT AVON-BY-THE-SEA.

FAVORITE KINDS OF BAIT USED ON THE SHARB RIVER-PROJECTED IMPROVEMENTS-LATE ARRIVALS AT THE HOTELS.

Aven-by-the-Sea, Aug. 25 (Special).—This has been good year at the resort, and if all the plans proed for its advancement and improvement are carried out it will be one of the most popular summer towns on the entire New-Jersey coast. The principles of temperance are strictly enforced here, and thus the hotels are kept entirely free from the element which has proven so obnoxious at some of the other summer the erection of a mammoth hotel for use next season.

There are a number of ardent fishermen here among the guests of the several hotels and cottages. They have been making big catches the entire season. They equip themselves in rubber boots, and standing in the edge of the water, cast their well-baited hooks far out into the surf. They favor the erection of a fishing pier like the one at Asbury Park. Several big sea bass have been caught here this season. The heaviest weighed nearly twenty-three pounds, season one of our prominent cottagers, James Ronan, of Trenton, hooked a big bass near Shark River Inlet. After a most exciting battle with his prize he succeeded in reeling it in and pulling it ashore The fish tipped the scales at forty-two pounds. is the biggest fish caught along this section of the New-Jersey coast for several years.

This week also the cottagers and hotel guests have been having merry times at their crabbing parties on Shark River. The student of human nature can spend several hours in watching these parties and studying the reasons why they use different kinds of bait by which to lure the toothsome shell fish up to the top of the water, where he can be scientifically scooped up with a hand net. The summer visitors from each section of the country have their favorite bait. Those who register from Boston use skinned heads of sheep. The averag Jerseyman is fond of using "job-lots" of beef, and the older the meat the better he likes it. This opening service of the day was attended by at least 8,000 people. The Rev. Dr. Stokes, president of the Ocean Grove Association, conducted the ser-vice. Notable among those present were the venerable Dr. Marshall, of Mississippi; Mrs. Roberts, wislaw of the first President and Bishop of Liberia, and the Rev. Dr. Harper, of the Presbyterian Church. The anxiety to give testimony was so great that a dozen would be speaking at once. The regular that a dozen would be speaking at once. The regular service was opened with prayer by the Rev. S. W. #### THE END OF THE SEASON.

PUBLIC EXERCISES AT CHAUTAUQUA CEASE TO-DAY.

FEW PEOPLE LEFT AT THE LAKE-NEXT YEAR'S PROGRAMME-SENATOR VEDDER WORK-ING ON ANOTHER TAX BILL.

[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.]

Chautauqua, Aug. 25.—The Chautauqua season closes The exodus since last Wednesday, when the 1889 class received diplomas, has left hardly thousand people on the grounds. By Tuesday after noon the bulk of these will have dispersed to all points of the compass. The Hotel Athenaeum will lose on Wednesday. The season has been an unsually successful one, and the arrangements which ar making for next year contemplate an even more attractive programme. The College of Liberal Arts will continue under Dr. Harper's direction, and few, it any, changes will be made in the faculty. The School of the English Bible will again be conducted by Dr. Harper and Dr. Weidner. Dr. Adams, of Johns Hopkins, will fill the chair of history, and Dr. Ely that of political economy. Dr. H. R. Palmer will retain the presidency of the musical department. Dr. Palmer was yesterday presented by the choir with a gold watch, and J. V. Flagier, the organist, with a diamond pin. The programme of entertainments by visiting lecturers has not yet been completed. The success of the experiment with Professor Mahaify makes it likely, however, that some-distinguished Englishman possibly Professor Bryce, or even Sir John Lubbock, may be invited to visit Chantauqua. If the funds are forthcoming. Bishop Vincent's idea of an "After School," in which those who have finished a regular college course may devote six weeks to the study of one subject under the direction of eminent specialists, will probably be carried out; also the plan for reviving the summer school for children. Durill be pursued, as already indicated in The Tribune A correspondence course will be kept up in connecion with college work, and the C. L. S. C. class of 1893 will begin its readings in October. State Senator C. P. Vedder has spent the day here He is a candidate for re-election from this district and speaks hopefully of his prespects. All of the and speaks hopefully of his prespects. All of the delegates from Cattaraugus County will support him and most of them from Chautaugus County. There are three other candidates—Dr. Fenner, of Fredoula; L. B. Sessions, and A. C. Wade; but it is understood that there will be no concerted opposition to the Senator. He is already at work on another liquor-tax bill.

"The one which Governor Hill vetoed," he says, "was the first bill presented at that session of the Senate. If I am sent back, I hope the same may be true of this one. I mean to keep at it until successful. I believe we shall carry the State. There is harmony all along the line, and I think a good ticket will be nominated and elected. There is certain to be a good deal of knifing between the Hill and Cleveland men."

land men."

Dr. John R. Paxton, of New-York, preached here this morning. He said in his sermon: "While people are to-day more humane than ever before, there is so much dishonesty that, by my soul, if stealing were to be punished by stoning to death, all the quarries in the world would soon become exhausted."

Dr. A. A. Willotts, of Louisville, lectured this evening on "John Bright."

OBITUARY.

HENRY SHAW.

St. Louis, Aug. 25.-Henry Shaw, the venerable philanthropist and the best friend St. Louis ever had, died at 3:25 this morning. He gave no evidence of physical pain or mental suffering. At his bedside were Mrs. Julius Morriss, Mr. Shaw's sister, and a number of his most intimate friends.

Henry Shaw was an Englishman by birth. At the age of nineteen he came to America and made St. Louis his home, arriving here on May 4, 1810. first embarked in the hardware business, on the levee, and for a time was proprietor, clerk and porter. also gave some attention to Indian supplies. He prospered, and after twenty years of commercial life had amassed a sufficient fortune to enable him to retire from business, which he did at the age of forty. He went abroad and visited nearly every quarter of the globe, being away from this country about ten years. It was upon his return that he began the study and cultivation of plants and flowers, and it was in the prosecution of these studies that the now world-famous botanical gardens the now world famous botanical gardens had their origin. He made his gardens and beautiful estate free to the public. With the death of Henry Shaw the famous botanical gardens become the property of the State of Missouri. Another, and perhaps more valuable, munificence, was the gift to the city of Tower Grove Park, a resort of peculiar beauty. Mr. Shaw's residence, where he died, was at Tower Grove Park, and he passed but little time at his downtown home.

Mr. Shaw's estate is valued at $2,500,000, and it is thought the greater part will be left to the city of St. Louis in various bequests. Mr. Shaw was an Episcopalian, and the charitable institutions of that church, it is understood, will be particularly favored in his will. The only relatives of Mr. Shaw in this country are his sister, Mrs. Julius Morriss, and a coustn, Frank Braibury. A large number of distant relatives reside in Manchester, England.

FIGHTING FOR SOUTH DAKOTA'S CAPITOL. Pierre, S. D., Aug. 25.—The contest that was waged over the location of the capitol in North Dakota is as nothing to the battle being fought for the same prize in this State. An organization which will probably decide the location of the capitol is the Woonsocket Capitol Investment Company, whose stockholders are scattered all over the new State. This company was organized for the purpose of speculation in lands at some point to be decided on by the stockholders as the place where the capitol should be. In response to invitation of the directors of the company, six of the seven capitol contestants have sent in bids for the support of the company, and the company will decid on the matter about the middle of the present wear Great interest attaches to the decision.
